For the Chronicle. THE MIDNIGHT CRY.

BY BELL KLAPPER.

The full orb'd Moon, tair queen of night, Had spread o'er Earth her silvery light, And cloudless was the sky; The warring winds scarce sunk to sleep Still softly sighed, as though to keep A low sweet lullaby

The noon of night was drawing near, My mind was calm, serene and clear; And slumber sealed mine eyes; When there arose such dreadful screams As quick disturbed my undnight dreams, And filled me with surprise.

From hill to hill the ec oes flew-From manly voices, then I knew They wished not to disperse;---"Come back for Bob;" .- "Where are you Mose," With such harsh epithets, arose As I will not rehearee.

It lasted full an hour, or more, And when the noise and din was o'er, My heart evith griet did fill; For I remembered with a sigh The prompter of that midnight cry,

The demon of the still. Such spirits still go skutking round, In strange disguises they are found, But rocky hills, and vallies lone. Oft answer back the fearful tone

O tempora, O mores!

Of the drend midnight cry Still Shameless tashion spreads her boar de With gilded baits, and thus affords To bring the lane before us; ... Where pride and mammoff rule the crowd. Let the downtrodden cry aloud,

MISCELLANEOUS.

From Putnam's Mouthly for April. CONNECTICUT GEORGICS.

I "farmed it" two summers, when I was eleven and twelve years old. I had been brought up in a paved city; was lean, white, slender, school-worn, bookish. Analyzing now the phases of interior life which experienced then, I seem to have been impregnated with city associations; or rather the boy's soul in me was paved over with last an outlandish Vermontese barbarism, sigbrick and stone, like the wall whose hot reflections smote my eyes in summer, and gird- cartwhip exercise was demonstrated; whose ed me in always. I can remember how I shed adaptation to the intellectual capacities of a shrunken epidermis, as it were, like a moulting crab, as if I really grew inwardly by the of genius. For the single lessen taught the fresh tulness of the country. I found that, ox appeals with metaphysical truth to the deheretofore been gazing; dry and scaly with and with practical wisdom developes in brick and stone, dead and still on Sundays, great Yankee dollar-chase;-that, besides should come towards me, I touch him up on ful, sun-lighted, dewy, free, full of life, unconstrained, fresh, vigorous—the world of These manœuvres having been accompanied this, there was another-infinite, calm, peace-God; as the city is the world of men-and of devils. I was to enter upon my agricultural momer near the south shore of Connecticut. I to say, imprecatory, all developed by skilful ing in the end of Spring, from my city home on of a certain landholder from my uncle's vicinity, who had come thither on business in his private conveyance. All the day I rode southward, through town and village, wood and field, in the absorbing trance of deep delight which a child enjoys in any discursive or adventurous enterprise, however humble. Every thing was enjoyable. . The steady, bi-nary progression of the old farm-horse's persistent trot; the rattling of the bones of the hard-seated and springless wagon; the boundless woods, full of new forms and colors on rocks, branches and leaves; sprinkled on surface, and permeated through unfathomable fences; sometimes a very magnificent threeraffe or an ornithorhynchus; the wide, open pardon. fields, with their "industrial regiments" on ing and writhing trout-brooks; the quiet and composed rivers; the steep hills, and deep, atill ponds, of each of which the neighbors sever with pride that the bottom has never been found-a fact, perhaps, to be accounted for by its never having been considered worth looking after; -all were new, all overflowing

THE FRESH MEADOW.

With empty cart and full dinner-pails, we set out early for the assault upon the June grass. The "fresh meadow" was a level intervale, the road to which ran through a large upland mowing lot, descended through a secret chasm in a ledge of rocks crowned with trees, and led us out into the open sunny meadow behind, like the downward paths by which princes in fairy tales descend into realms of underground loveliness, ruled by expectant queens.

BATARD TAYLOR recently delivered an in petition of any person whatever, for a tavern teresting lecture in New York on the A people, and described i's effects in some ex periments he made dpon himself. His description was as follows:

While in Arabia, I had one very remark able experience. There is a drug in the East whose effect is like opium, that which lands in various parts of the country, but is prepared from the Indian hemp. It was about to enter a battle as a stimulus. It prolabor, or precure any to be done on Sunday. New York city, who is the only legal heir to while the other part looks on. From motives

Damascus at the time. Soon after taking the drug, the effect began to appear. I saw the furniture in the room, talked with the company and yet I seemed to be near the pyramid of Cheops whose block of stone appeared to me like huge equares of Virginia tobacco. The scene changed, and I was on the desert in a boat made of the mother of pearl. The sand seemed to be grains of ustrous gold, through which my boat ran as seemed filled with harmonies of the sweetest music; the atmosphere was filled with light, with odors and music. Before me there seem ed to be a constant series of arcades and rainbows, through which for fifteen years I seemed to glide. The finer senses were enveloped and all gratification was a single harnonfous sensation. Hence we can easily conceive the origin of the Arabian Nights. My companion, a huge Kentuckian, tried the drug with amusing effect. After looking at me awhile, he suddenly started up with
